‘Several scenes’ in hit streaming show filmed in Suffolk

Several scenes in the new series of an Emmy Award-winning show starring Hollywood actors were filmed in Suffolk, it has been revealed.

Apple TV’s season six of Slow Horses has launched on screens this week, with key cast members - including Gary Oldman, Kristen Scott Thomas and Jack Lowden - all returning.

The show, which has won three Emmy Awards since first airing in 2022, follows a team of disgraced MI5 agents exiled to the dead-end department of Slough House who, despite their mistakes and their foul-mouthed boss Jackson Lamb (Gary Oldman), repeatedly find themselves caught up in dangerous spy plots that threaten Britain.

Babergh and Mid Suffolk District Council has now confirmed that “several scenes” in this new series were actually filmed in the county.

However, the locations used are being kept a closely guarded secret for now.

Local Tracey Powiesni got involved in filming when the cameras and cast arrived on her doorstep in early 2025.

“When a leaflet came through my door announcing that a TV series was going to be filmed in my village and that the production’s locations team was looking for local residents to work as marshals, I knew it was an opportunity not to be missed,” she said.

“With a son building a career in the film industry in LA, it felt like the perfect opportunity to gain some first-hand insight into his world.”

Ms Powiesni has now also been invited back for series seven of Slow Horses.

“I really missed the crew and being part of something so exciting when filming wrapped, so I was delighted I was invited back on set,” she said.

Back in 2024, an initial cohort of 23 people took part in ‘Set Ready’ – a free course funded locally by Babergh and Mid Suffolk District Councils and delivered in partnership with Screen Suffolk - which is how Ms Powiesni developed the skills to join the crew.
